simplex CODE MANAGER

A case study in satisfaction

Like many municipalities, Winnebago County, Wisconsin, lived with an out-dated zoning code. And like many municipalities, it invested time and resources to prepare a new code.

Realizing that was just one important step, not the endgame, Winnebago County's planning and zoning department evaluated how the new code could be posted online in a user-friendly format.

"For us it didn't make sense to prepare a wonderful new zoning code to simply post it online in the usual way—we wanted more," said Jerry Bougie, Winnebago County's planning director.

The department's staff wanted to emphasize the most important parts of the code in an interactive and intuitive interface. They also wanted to create a website that would take information formerly accessible only to staff and make it available to the public. And yes, they also wanted a calendar, a page for frequently asked questions and much, much more.

"Simplex Code Manager was the solution we were looking for."

"With a long list of needs and high expectations as a benchmark, we evaluated the various options that were available and soon realized Simplex Code Manager was the solution we were looking for," says Cary Rowe, Winnebago County's zoning administrator.

The department finds Simplex a handy transitional tool. It's using a basic Simplex-created website as a public participation tool to keep residents informed during the process. Once that code is adopted, they'll create a new website using all the bells and whistles Simplex has to offer.
